

Time travel? Really?

Chapter 1 by Dave Harris

All his life George had loved all the stories about time travel. Whether it be movies, TV shows, comics or whatever, he loved them all.

Now he actually had a real life, fully operational, fully functional time machine right there in front of him, he wasn't quite so sure about it.

This could well have been caused by the near skeletal, very likely nearly dead old looking man dressed in a Nazi uniform who was clutching the aforementioned time machine.

"Fasshnefurteedahgenheim Schnell Schnell alogfubintoog faaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaargh" said the old man. He looked around with wide eyed puzzlement at George's backyard, where he had appeared moments before accompanied by what looked like a large ball of lightning and a sort of fizzing sound. And a strong smell of burnt sausages.

I was with George that day. The day before it happened. George had met this man at one of those Time Warrior clubs. Time Warriors are a bunch of people who are convinced that time travel was possible. I thought they were wrong, and it was all a bunch of made up things to keep people entertained.

Turns out I was wrong.
